ARTS ED & LEARNING NEWS

We wish everyone a happy, hopeful, and healthy 2021!

Olivia Slaughter, 2020 Utah State Champion.

When I found my first choice poem, a poet writing about an experience I'd had that I'd never seen written about before, I felt an instant connection to it. This poem, among the other two I competed with, gave me the words to express this experience, my emotions, and learn about myself in the process.

The Lewis Prize for Music believes young people with access to high-quality music learning, performance and creation opportunities will mature into thriving individuals.

The following ten individuals/organizations are finalists for $500,000 awards for excellence. Recipients will be announced January 12, 2021.

The Lewis Prize for Music

Artists and artistic communities have known about the power of the arts to heal, inspire, provide solace, energize, build community, teach, erase divides, comfort, instill joy, and promote peace. The arts give humans multiple tools for self-expression and the ability to view, participate in, and understand our world. This time of COVID-19 has truly clarified the importance of the arts.

Some examples from murals around the world:

Stay at home, please. Today the whole world is in distress.
Everyone advises in horror and fear.
Wash your hands, sanitize yourself, don't infect us.
No guests, no visitors. We are alone at home.
Corona stole our life.
Keep your distance, keep your distance and we did.
We became a few memories.
Whenever they pass our imagination we smile.
Where's the school? Where are the classes?
And my friends, and the teacher asking us about our homework?
Empty and sad streets.
And the playgrounds are as if they're asking about us.
Corona, tomorrow you will see.
Our dreams, our awareness and our will bring us victory over you.
